

Initial Thoughts

The world is changing rapidly. But is that really new? Since industrialization, each generation has faced technologies that reshaped everything before them. AI is no different. What has changed is the pace: adaptation that once took generations now happens within years. But the human capacity to adapt has always been our greatest strength. Every new generation absorbs new realities faster than the last. The key is acceptance. New tools, new systems, new realities. That acceptance is what drives achievement, growth, and ultimately, the wealth of our societies.